Beginning a Job Hunt

Mike Bloomberg has cut all money for education out of the city budget and you are now unemployed.

1. With a partner spend about fifteen minutes thinking about and writing down what your experience, knowledge, qualifications, and interests are (see below). After you complete that activity, list the careers that you think match those attributes.
2. Spend about fifteen minutes looking in the help-wanted pages for some jobs of interest. List a few of the jobs you may want to apply for.
3. After listing some jobs, spend about fifteen minutes with your partner writing a summary of your experience: the process of discerning your attributes and of deciding on a career and on the jobs you will apply for. Describe how you would use this activity with a classroom. Prepare to discuss with the group.
